

Paul to Bettye (On the first night after she died)
Jan 7, 2004 - Letter #1 of 6

Well sweetheart, today I said goodbye for now to you. You were so beautiful as you serenely breathed your last breath on this earth. Gary and I sat there four hours hugging each other and stroking your brow and gently crying. What a powerful moment in and out of time. And just before you drew your last breath, I saw the light mingle between you and me, and Bohm's holomovement was realized between us, further sealing our everlasting bond.

The light from loving intelligence sprung forth, caught up you and me, and mingled with our inner lights and we and cosmos and all beyond were caught up in one symphony of joy.

And now I have that memory mixed with this "eternal now moment". And we still make quite an image of all that is holy, in, around and throughout all space, and yes, beyond all of that. Forms come and go... your lovely form has dissipated into an energy force that I can only imagine as I stand in awe before the threshold of new life emerging even as the old fades away. What an exciting time you must be having as you dance and swirl in the light... all tensions, worries and cares completely gone as you begin to live out of the super abundance of joyful new life.

What form did you take into the mysterious unknown? And how does it fit the grand power with no boundaries that you have inherited? Will you return to us mere mortals who long for a fulfillment that only you who have passed this veil can know? How can you be "there" when I feel you so close "here". Are they the same thing when looked at through your sight?

Thanks... Thanks for it all. I'm kinda tired now... was up so early today rushing to your bedside and so glad to spend an eternity in an hour with you. Your son... my how you must be proud of him as he "fathered" me. We did you proud today... we were Family like you always pictured it. Goodnight love. Guide me through the night, and when I wake, lo, you will greet me. I love you with the love of the infinite, and once more we are one.
